Edgar Selwyn has managed to enliven the generally dull subject of traction by telling it in terms of sex in "The Mirage," which opened the Times Square Theater last night. It seems that no big deal is ever worked out without drink, dice and daughters of joy. Seven ladies of dubious virtue are required in "The Mirage" to complete the merger of two trolley lines. It is this the correct ratio per mileage, it is difficult to understand how Mr. Selwyn resisted the stupendous dramatic possibilities of a play about the Union Pacific.

Of course, there are so many real things in the world that it seems rather futile business for a dramatist to concern himself wholly with fictional ones, but in a cheap, second-rate sort of way "The Mirage" which opened the Times Square Theater last night, it seems that no big deal is ever worked out without drink, dice and daughters of joy. Seven ladies of dubious virtue are required in "The Mirage" to complete the merger of two trolley lines. It is this the correct ratio per mileage, it is difficult to understand how Mr. Selwyn resisted the stupendous dramatic possibilities of a play about the Union Pacific.

To the credit of the dramatist it must be admitted that he has been strikingly consistent throughout. Invariably the characters of the play do and say the things which no human being could conceivably say under the same circumstances. To this end the play is based on several convenient and absurd assumptions. The most important of these is that people in large cities are bad and people in small towns are good. In Mr. Selwyn's mind there seems to be a direct relation between salvation and the census.

The hero of the play comes from Erie, Pa., where the inhabitants are still spottish, according to the revised statistics of 1920. The hero is more than usually good. He is bashful in the presence of the girls, he is a moralist that his play became tedious. At such times "The Mirage" seemed nothing more than a poor relation of "The Eastward Ho."

David Warfield will appear this season in a revival of "The Return of Peter Grimm," the spiritualistic play by David Belasco, in which the actor originally appeared at the Belasco Theater on October 17, 1911, for a season's run. A distinguished company will support him. Mr. Warfield will begin his season next Monday night in New York, and after a week's engagement there will begin a tour of the principal cities of the country.

"The Meanest Man in the World," announced for presentation by George M. Cohan on Monday evening, October 11, at the Hudson Theater, will open on Tuesday evening instead.

As a result of the success of "The Kreutzer Sonata" at the Jewish Art Theater, featuring Rudolph Schildkraut and Mme. Anastasia Ortheskaya, the Tolstoy play will be repeated to-night, to-morrow night and Sunday.

"Kissing Time," announced for opening at the Lyric Theater next Monday night, will open later in the week.

Robert Warwick, the screen star, is to be starred by the Shuberts in a new comedy, entitled "The Dauntless Three," by Walter Hackett and Horace Annesley Vachell. Estelle Winwood will play opposite him.

The "George M. Cohan Revue" now being organized, has added to its cast Bessie McCoy, widow of Richard Harding Davis. The revue will be placed in rehearsal within a few weeks.

Lulu McConnell in "Poor Little Ritz Girl" will be starred in a new musical play being written by Herbert Fields, son of Lew Fields, who produced the play in which she is now appearing.

William Hodge wrote "The Guest of Honor" from a romance in real life. He wrote it three years ago after a friend had related the story of John Weatherbee, the character Hodge interprets. Incidentally, John Weatherbee lived only two blocks from the

A. C. Bedford Sails To Attend World Commerce Session

First Meeting of International Chamber To Be Held in Paris; Many Merchants Passengers on Mauretania

The Cunard liner Mauretania sailed yesterday for Cherbourg and Southampton with a fairly large cabin passenger complement for this season. The majority of the travelers were American business men.

Prominent among them was A. C. Bedford, chairman of the board of directors of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, who has been elected vice-chairman of the newly organized International Chamber of Commerce, which is to hold its first meeting in Paris on October 11. The sessions will be attended by representatives from France, Belgium, England, Italy and the United States.

"The International Chamber of Commerce," said Mr. Bedford, "is the practical expression of the conviction of business men of the five key countries, who were allies during the war, that some central international commercial body is necessary to facilitate the commerce upon which the destinies of the world rest, to promote better commercial relations and help to remove many of the causes of friction which constantly arise because of misunderstandings and lack of cooperation."
